A WORD OF THANKS

Rev Ed Clark and his wife Mary wish to thank all of the residents of Heritage Pointe and guests from the community for their good wishes, words of congratulations, and their sharing with them during the Open House at Heritage Pointe on Sunday, May 25th on the occasion of Rev. Clark's retirements from the Chaplaincy over the last eight and a half years at the home. The afternoon was an honor for Rev. Clark and Mary and they will always appreciate what the community and Heritage Pointe has done for them. They also thank Kelly Jones, Rev. Gerald and Ruth Moreland, and Chaplain Ginny Schultz for the decorations and refreshments they served.

May God bless all of you.

DEAR EDITOR,

After just celebrating a beautiful Memorial Day, I have been thinking about our many freedoms for which a great price has been paid, and I am overwhelmed with gratitude. I pray each of us will continue to appreciate, guard and respect those freedoms and our fellow man.

Today our country is ill at ease. Even citizens of our county seem to be getting ready to square off against each other. Does Huntington County want to harvest wind or do we not? Does Huntington County want of NEED industrial wind turbines and also wind FAMRS? Right now our county is a pretty nice place to live: farmers continue to plant and harvest crops, raise their chickens, cattle, hogs and other livestock and derive income from their labors. What does wind have to do with all that? NOTHING - unless, of course, you have learned to spin straw into gold .. Er, oops, unless you have figured out to make money SELLING A PLAN TO CATCH THE WIND, transfer it to energy, and then ship it off to the east coast as soon as possible!

Enter the WIND ENERGY SALESMAN! He tells of a dire need for Huntington's wind. He offers easy money so farmers will sign away parts of their farms on which to build industrial wind turbines and establish wind farms. Wow! All that dough! It's FOUND MONEY - except it isn't. That's our Federal Tax money that is being used to bankroll this plan and what do we have to show for our generosity? Zilch! Nothing but the joy of seeing ugly industrial machines on our landscape, and the pleasure and additional cost of dealing with drainage problems and flooded farms caused by excess surface water that can't be absorbed by the buried concrete used to anchor those 500 ft. turbines; and oh yes, let's not forget the good feeling that comes from sacrificing prime crop-producing farmland! Why, never mind the hazards to our wildlife friends, especially bird, bats (mosquito eaters), and the symbol of our nation - the American Eagle! Where's the loyalty and love now?

Question: What happens when the money runs out? Who gets left with the wind turbines and their problems? Where is the Wind Energy Salesman now?

CLEARING THE AIR

Earlier this week an Indiana media outlet published an article that suggested it is OK for Hoosiers to wash the surfaces in a dwelling to remove meth residue or paint over meth residue to make a dwelling safe to occupy again. Since the article ran, IDEM has received multiple calls from property owners and Qualified Inspectors asking for correct information.

The Indiana Department of Environmental Management (IDEM) wants to make certain that Hoosiers understand to never try to clean up a meth lab on their own or use paint to cover meth residue. It can be detrimental to your health.

The law requires dwellings, vehicles or watercraft, where a meth lab was present, to be professionally tested by a qualified inspector for illegal drug lab cleanups (<http://www.in.gov/idem/4184.htm>) to determine the amount of meth contamination present. Entering a property without first assessing the levels of contamination may interfere with the validity of the testing, complicate the cleanup, or seriously jeopardize your health.

Once results of the test are received the cleanup plan can be determined. The level of meth contamination determines the complexity and cost of the cleanup. The cleanup must occur under the supervision of a certified meth lab cleanup inspector. Final testing is required after the cleanup to verify levels are safe and the dwelling may be reoccupied. Once the property has been cleared, the certified inspector will file a Qualified Inspectors Certificate of Illegal Drug Lab Cleanup with the owner, the Indiana Department of Health, the IDEM, and the local county health department.

Hoosiers can find detailed, accurate information from IDEM's website regarding the inspection and cleanup of illegal drug labs at <http://www.in.gov/idem/4178.htm>. The statutes, rules and cleanup methods put in place are to protect the health of Hoosiers and not intended to be an undue burden. Cases have been reported of adults and children who have suffered severe health effects due to exposure to meth residue on surfaces in a dwelling that was never properly tested and cleaned. Meth residue is usually undetectable to the human eye, making it impossible to determine the seriousness of the exposure without a test.

About IDEM

IDEM (www.idem.IN.gov) implements federal and state regulations regarding the environment. Through compliance assistance, incentive programs and educational outreach, the agency encourages and aids businesses and citizens in protecting Hoosiers and our environment.

FREE FISHING

For Hoosiers who have never cast a fishing line or haven't cast a line in a while, Free Fishing Weekend, June 7-8, is a great opportunity.

That's because Indiana's adult residents do not need a fishing license or a trout/salmon stamp to fish Indiana waters during Free Fishing Weekend.

Clint Kowalik, DNR Go FishIN coordinator, suggested several Free Fishing Weekend options for adults and families.

"Go alone to a quiet, secret spot, explore new waters with your family, or take a kid to a local fishing derby or city park pond," Kowalik said.

To celebrate Free Fishing Weekend, recreation areas across the state are planning fun fishing derbies, casting clinics, fish-cleaning demonstrations and cooking classes.

Area properties hosting activities for Free Fishing Weekend are:

J. Edward Roush Lake, Huntington, (260) 468-2127

Salamonie Lake, Andrews, (260) 468-2127

Further information is available at dnr.IN.gov/fishwild/3598.htm.

Adults who decide they want to buy a license for the rest of the year can do so anytime at IndianaOutdoor.IN.gov. The standard resident license costs $17.

Children age 17 and younger do not need a fishing license in Indiana at any time.

All other fishing regulations are still in effect during Free Fishing Weekend.

People who need reasonable modifications for effective participation in Free Fishing Weekend events at DNR properties should contact the property at least 72 hours before the event or call the DNR ADA Coordinator at (317) 232-4145.

MENTORS WANTED

(BPT) - Careers in science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) are growing and quickly. By 2023, STEM will generate a projected 2.6 million new jobs, creating a high demand for qualified employees with STEM backgrounds in the coming years, according to Georgetown Public Policy Institute's Center on Education and the Workforce.

Despite attractive career opportunities for the next generation of STEM workers, the industry continues to be predominantly male. Women make up only 24 percent of the STEM workforce, the U.S. Department of Commerce reports.

Several programs nationwide are working to close the gender gap by encouraging participation among female students in STEM projects, activities and lessons early on in their education. DeVry University's HerWorld is one such program. Its mission is to educate high school girls about STEM-related fields and connect them with real-life role models.

Throughout March, designated National HerWorld Month by DeVry University, thousands of young women will interact with their peers, learn from experienced women in high-visibility STEM careers, and participate in confidence-building activities and hands-on workshops at HerWorld events across the country.

"HerWorld was created 17 years ago to fill a need for programs that support and develop high school girls' interest in STEM," says Dr. Donna M. Loraine, provost/vice president of academic affairs at DeVry University. "While we have made great progress, our focus for HerWorld today is to encourage girls' interest in these subjects in high school and beyond by connecting them with mentors who can show them that careers in STEM are challenging but realizable."

One-third of women who enter STEM bachelor's degree programs after high school switch their major to a non-STEM field by the time they graduate, according to a study by the U.S. Department of Education and National Center for Education Statistics. Demonstrating to teenage girls that there are women who will support them through their journey in STEM is an important part of HerWorld's objective.

This year for National HerWorld Month, DeVry University is partnering again with Mayim Bialik, best known for her television roles on "The Big Bang Theory" and "Blossom." The renewed partnership between Bialik and DeVry is a natural fit given Bialik's own STEM background: she earned her Doctorate of philosophy in neuroscience in 2007.

"My biology tutor on the set of 'Blossom' was a tremendously significant mentor for me, inspiring me to look at science and my academic skills in a different way," says Bialik. "Though I am currently employed primarily as an actress and not a neuroscientist, I still benefited from a role model showing me what I could achieve in the sciences. I think young girls today deserve the same thing and I want to give them the confidence they need to succeed in STEM."

The STEM industry has garnered national attention recently, most notably in President Obama's 2014 State of the Union Address.

"Teachers and principals in schools from Tennessee to Washington, D.C. are making big strides in preparing students with skills for the new economy - problem solving, critical thinking, science, technology, engineering, and math," says President Obama. "Some of this change is hard. It requires everything from much more challenging curriculums and more demanding parents to better support for teachers and new ways to measure how well our kids think, not how well they can fill in a bubble on a test. But it's worth it - and it's working."

HerWorld is part of this national momentum. Bialik and guest speakers who are role models from a variety of STEM backgrounds will show high school girls how they can apply their skills and intelligence to unique and interesting careers in STEM. Programs like HerWorld address a vital need to provide girls interested in STEM with mentors who can guide and motivate them throughout their educational and professional journeys. Closing the gender gap requires opening the eyes of the next generation to the many possibilities in STEM, and no one can do that better than the women who have seen their own aspirations come to fruition.

make sure your home and family are ready.

Outage Tolls

Nearly 70 percent of U.S. adults who experience a power outage are saddled with costs, according to a recent Harris Interactive survey sponsored by Briggs & Stratton Corporation. Expenses include supply purchases, such as flashlights, portable generators and candles, property damage and replacing spoiled food. Additionally, your home may be uninhabitable in extreme weather.

Prevention

Does your neighborhood have above-ground power lines? While you may not have autonomy over your entire block, you can maintain trees in your own yard to help prevent outages. Eliminate dying trees and keep overgrown branches trimmed.

Stay Powered

In the event of an outage, you can keep the lights on with a generator. Portable generators allow you to keep your personal electronics charged for emergency situations as well as keeping in-touch with family members.

Just be sure to use it safely.

"A portable generator can pay significant dividends during storm season," says Eric Loferski, Director of Marketing for Briggs & Stratton Portable Power. "But generators can be dangerous if not operated properly." When operating a generator, keep these safety tips top of mind:

- Don't run your generator inside enclosed areas, even when using fans or opening doors and windows for ventilation. Deadly levels of carbon monoxide (CO) can quickly build up and linger for hours, even after the generator has shut off.
- Locate the unit outside and far from doors, windows, vents and other openings that could allow CO to be drawn indoors. Direct the exhaust away from potentially occupied spaces.
- Maintain CO alarms in your home.
- Get to fresh air right away if you start to feel dizzy or weak.
- Generators pose a risk of shock and electrocution, especially when operated in wet conditions. Wait for rain to pass before using a generator or protect it from moisture under an open, canopy-like structure on a dry surface where water cannot reach it. Dry your hands before touching the generator.

- Connect electrical products to the generator using heavy-duty extension cords specifically designed for outdoor use. Make sure the wattage rating for each cord exceeds the total wattage of all appliances connected to it.

- Never power your house wiring by plugging the generator into a wall outlet. This practice, known as "back feeding," presents an electrocution risk to utility workers and others served on the power grid.

More generator safety tips can be found at www.BriggsAndStratton.com.

MENTAL HEALTH TIPS

(StatePoint) If you are the parent of an older child or teen, you may not think about his or her day-to-day medical needs as often as you did during early childhood. But older kids also are dependent on you, especially when it comes to emotional health and wellness.

"Life transitions, romantic situations, stress and exposure to drugs and alcohol are just a few of the challenges facing a teen or young adult," says James Perrin, MD, FAAP, 2014 President of the American Academy of Pediatrics (AAP). "As a parent, you can help ease these transitions and encourage positive choices."

The AAP offers these tips for parents to foster good mental health:

- At each new stage in your child's life, be extra vigilant for signals that he needs extra support. Be ready to provide it.
- Check in often and keep the lines of communication open. If your child is away at college or has moved out, speak regularly by phone. Children should know that they can talk to you about anything. Be committed to broaching tough topics. Talk about your own experiences and fears when you were an adolescent.
- If your teen has a mental health diagnosis, he or she will need extra support. Pediatricians, school counselors and mental health professionals are important resources.

- Watch for mental health red flags, such as excessive sleeping, personality shifts, excessive moodiness, noticeable weight loss or gain, excessive secrecy or signs of self-harm.

- Don't skip the annual physical. Not only are teens still on a vaccination schedule, but check-ups are a crucial opportunity to talk to your pediatrician about any concerns, as well as diagnose any potential physical and mental health issues. It's also a great time for teens to seek confidential advice.

- Safeguard your home against prescription drug abuse by keeping your own medications locked. According to the AAP, prescription drug misuse by adolescents is second only to marijuana and alcohol misuse. The most commonly abused prescription drugs include Vicodin and Xanax.

- Provide logistical support for young adults like completing health forms and physicals for college; setting up accommodations at school if they have a mental health diagnosis; finding physicians to care for their adult needs; and signing up for health insurance. Your pediatrician's office can help.

- Help limit teens' stress. Don't encourage them to take on excessive time-consuming extra-curricular activities. Avoid comparing your children. Every child has his own strengths.

- Encourage habits that reduce stress and promote physical and mental health, such as a well-balanced diet, getting at least seven hours of sleep a night, and regular exercise.

- At this age, it's important for parents to arm their older children with coping skills that will serve them throughout life, rather than handling everything for them.

More health tips for parents of older children, teens and young adults can be found at www.HealthyChildren.org.
