KUDOS, KICKS & KARATS

THE UPTOWN GARDENER
by Ruth Herring

Another great fall day we had again, hope the farmers are getting their crops in without much weather problems.

Slowly I am getting the garden and flower beds ready for winter. I have started moving some of the tender annuals into the greenhouse I have in the sunroom. I usually bring in begonias and impatiens to make starts for spring. Saves a bit when it comes to buying plants in the spring. My geraniums I will bring in before the next frost. Usually try to save about 18 plants. I trim them back severely to make room for them. The geraniums I got from the 4-H club this year were huge. When I planted them I put a tablespoon of epon salts and teaspoon of miracle grow in the hole with a little soil, watered them really good and that is all I did to them. Either it worked well or it was a good growing season. They were too large to put in the greenhouse so I put them in the compost bin. I needed to pull them to replace with mums.

Still have a few potatoes to dig yet. They are doing very well growing in the straw. I think we will try it again next year, much easier to harvest and many were quite large a nice size for baking. This week while cleaning the freezer I found some small portions of pureed fruit I had saved from other recipes. I decided to mix some together to make fruit breads. It turned out well and will share it with you what I did.

I had enough butternut squash, applesauce, banana and persimmon to make 2 cups of mixed fruit. Beat 4 eggs, add 2 cups sugar, 1 cup oil, 1/2 cup water, 1 teaspoon vanilla. Sift together 3 1/2 cups flour, 1 teaspoon nutmeg, 1 teaspoon cinnamon, 2 teaspoon soda, 1/2 teaspoon salt. Add to the creamed mix, I added about 1/2 cup nuts. Pour into 3 med size bread pans that are oiled, bake at 350 about 45 minutes or till test done in center. This bread was moist and of good flavor. You could experiment with a combination of fruits that is left over just as mine was.

Have a great autumn.

LIFE SPRING COUNSELING

The Huntington University Graduate School has opened LifeSpring Counseling Center, a free counseling clinic on the university's campus.

The clinic is staffed by students in the graduate school's Master of Arts in counseling program and supervised by the program's director, Dr. Jerry E. Davis.

LifeSpring Counseling Center accepts donations, but the counseling sessions are free. The hours are 9 a.m. to 9 p.m. Monday through Thursday and 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Friday. The counseling center is open to the public and serves individuals, couples, families and children.

Play therapy is available for children. The center is also equipped to address the needs of adults who have drug and alcohol addictions.

In addition, LifeSpring will offer therapy groups as common needs are determined. These may address issues such as support for the unemployed, adult children of alcoholics and survivors of abuse as well as anger management.

The center's name and mission are based on Proverbs 4:23: "Above all else, guard your heart, for it is the wellspring of life." Teaching people how to guard their hearts is a passion for Davis.

"The idea was to help people take care of their hearts," he said. "With the difficulties we face in today's society and the pressures in relationships, we wanted to provide a safe outlet for the community. Our counselors can assist clients with setting boundaries, learning new skills, and generally understanding how to guard their hearts."

Currently, there are seven students seeing clients at LifeSpring. All sessions are videotaped for supervision purposes.

"This is to the benefit of the client," Davis explained. "I can see what is going on and be directly involved in their treatment."

LifeSpring Counseling Center is located at 479 Campus St., Huntington. It is the second house east of Kids Kampus. With questions or to schedule an appointment, call (260) 454-5500.

In addition to his role with LifeSpring, Davis serves as a part-time counselor for Grace & Truth Counseling Services, a ministry of College Park Church of the United Brethren in Christ in Huntington. He has opened free counseling clinics in Marion and Indianapolis, and he has served as a clinical supervisor for 14 years.

"Part of my goal when I started counseling centers was to respond to underserved populations in the community," Davis said. "One of my passions is to discover what the unmet needs are in the community so that we can address those."

Davis is a licensed clinical social worker, licensed marriage and family therapist, licensed mental health counselor and a national certified counselor. He has done private practice counseling with Samaritan Centers, Parkview Behavioral Health and the Family Care Center in Fort Wayne. He is a frequent presenter at local, regional and national conferences and seminars as well as retreats and providing pulpits for local churches. His research interests include the integration of psychology and theology, the integration of therapy with spiritual formation and direction, personality disorders, marital enrichment, and men's issues.

Davis has a long history with Huntington University and has served in various roles at the institution, including director of campus ministries and director of counseling services. Before joining the Huntington University Graduate School faculty, he served as professor of graduate counseling and director of the graduate counseling program at Indiana Wesleyan University.

INSURE YOUR KIDS

With the emotional debate on national health care reform beyond a fever pitch, you might be surprised by the data on health insurance and Indiana children. Even more surprising is the fact that part of the solution might be in your own backyard.

According to two federal surveys, the percentage of Indiana kids without health insurance is better than the national average. The U.S. Census Bureau reports that 8 percent of Hoosier children are uninsured. The national average is 12 percent.

The Census only counts kids who are without health insurance for the entire year. Another federal measurement, the National Survey for Children's Health, counts children who are uninsured for even one month in a year. That survey finds 14.7 percent of Indiana children lacking consistent health insurance. The national average is 15.1 percent.

Indiana also is ahead of the national average for access to private health insurance. The Census finds 73 percent of Hoosier children covered by private health benefits, compared with 65 percent nationally.

That still leaves nearly 123,000 Hoosier children without health insurance. Importantly, the majority of these kids – 59 percent – are eligible for existing public health plans but are not signed up. With access to health care so vital, how can eligible children not be enrolled?

"For some people there is a stigma, but I'm finding that a lot of people just don't understand that their children are eligible," said Judy Jacobs, the outreach manager for the Windrose Health Network. Through its Family Health Centers, Windrose serves low-income residents in Bartholomew, Brown, Johnson, Marion, Morgan and Shelby counties.

Jacobs said some families are overwhelmed and intimidated by the public health insurance application. Others do not have transportation to state-sponsored application sites. And still others move so often that they can not be reached by state government with program updates or eligibility information.

That is why Jacobs does not sit in her office. Instead, she goes out into the community to find children and families who are eligible for public health insurance.

"I will meet them at their local library or at their local Wal-Mart or at a drug store. Whatever works best for them," Jacobs said. "I also work hand-in-hand with school corporations. When kids are getting enrolled in school and applying for the free and reduced lunch programs, I'm available right there for the parents to fill out the health insurance application."

Public health insurance is available to eligible Indiana children through a program called Hoosier Healthwise. Children in families with incomes at or under 150 percent of the federal poverty level ($33,084 for a family of four) receive free health care. Families between 150 percent and 250 percent of poverty (up to $55,128 for a family of four) pay monthly premiums ranging from $22 to $70.

The number of eligible children is likely to grow. Census data released late last month show Indiana's poverty rate increasing to 13.1 percent, up from 12.3 percent the previous year.

All of us can be involved through service clubs, religious congregations and community organizations to help eligible but uninsured children and their families enroll in existing public health programs. (The State of Indiana publishes the list of application sites at: <http://www.in.gov/fssa>.)

However, even if all eligible children were enrolled in Hoosier Healthwise, more than 50,000 Indiana kids would still be uninsured, not qualifying for public health insurance and not able to purchase private health coverage.

Finding a solution for them, and all children, is well worth the effort. Children with health insurance are more likely to have a regular doctor who can provide personalized care based on a consistent knowledge of the child's medical history. As a result, researchers have found insured children are likely to have better health, lower rates of hospitalization and lower rates of childhood mortality than their uninsured peers.

Importantly, children with health insurance tend to perform better academically and socially since being sick and missing school are barriers to academic achievement.

The scope of any public policy proposal is determined by the size of the problem being addressed. While the federal data can inform our legislators, the efforts of Judy Jacobs can inform the rest of us on how to be part of the solution.

E-TRANSCRIPT SERVICE

There may be plenty of paperwork left for prospective college students to do these days, but sending a high school transcript doesn't have to be part of it thanks to Indiana's free e-Transcript service. Indiana was the first state to offer its students a free, electronic transcript service that provides access to colleges nationwide.

"As a state, we're working to remove any barrier that might prevent students from getting to and through college, and Indiana e-Transcript is one simple way to do just that," said Teresa Lubbers, Indiana's Commissioner for Higher Education. "Now the challenge is making sure all of our students and schools take full advantage of this free, convenient service."

Indiana e-Transcript allows Hoosier students to send their transcripts to colleges across the country at any time and receive automated notifications when their transcript is delivered, thereby removing that "did it get there" anxiety. High schools and colleges also benefit by cutting down on the administrative overhead and valuable staff time required to manually process paper transcripts and related admissions documents.

The popularity of Indiana e-Transcript has steadily increased with more than 112,500 total student transcripts processed to date. Despite double- and even triple-digit increases in the annual use of e-Transcript, participation rates remain unacceptably low in some local school districts. As a result, Commissioner Lubbers noted that the state is making a renewed push to encourage more students and schools to process their transcripts electronically this year.

More about Indiana e-Transcript

Indiana e-Transcript is now available to students in 97 percent of public high schools and 73 percent of nonpublic schools, allowing tens of thousands of Hoosiers to send their transcripts to colleges of their choice in Indiana or across the country. Students need only look for the e-Transcript logo on their school's Web site, fill out the appropriate information, and click submit. Transcripts are delivered safely and securely at no cost to the student or school. Learn more at www.learnmoreindiana.org/e-transcript.

State to launch new college preparation effort

Encouraging more students to use e-Transcript is just one part of an upcoming statewide initiative designed to help Indiana students take practical steps to get to and through college. During College GO! Week (Oct. 12-16), every high school student in Indiana will be asked to take practical steps aimed at preparing them for college and careers, including:

Every senior will complete a college application.

Every junior will register for Indiana's e-Transcript.

Every sophomore will complete the PSAT.

Every freshman will complete a career and college survey.

Led by the state's Learn More Indiana outreach partnership, College GO! Week is part of an ongoing effort to engage local communities in helping more students get to and through college. Learn more at www.learnmoreindiana.org/collegegoweek.

SCHOLARSHIP OPPORTUNITY

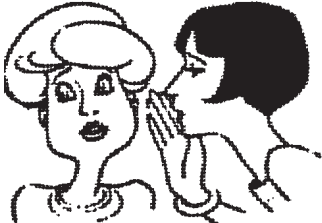

Hoosier Heroes™, a program of Indiana Dollars for Scholars, is an opportunity for Indiana high school juniors and seniors to win one of ten $2,000 college scholarships while honoring a Hoosier who has had a significant impact on their life.

To participate in the competition, students must select a living, current or former Indiana resident who inspires them and create a well-written, inspiring essay about that person, nominating him or her as a hero in one of the following five categories: Arts & Athletics; Business, Science & Technology; Education; Personal Inspiration; or Service. The top two student winners in each category will each receive a $2,000 postsecondary scholarship and their Heroes will also receive $2,000 to designate as a scholarship in his or her name to the Indiana high school of his or her choice. The deadline for nominations is December 11, 2009, and scholarships will be awarded at the Sixth Annual Hoosier Heroes Celebration on May 6, 2010 in Indianapolis, Indiana.

For more information and complete instructions, visit www.HoosierHeroes.org or call Indiana Dollars for Scholars at 1-866-877-1172.

ENCOUNTERING BARRIERS ON THE ROAD TO PAIN MANAGEMENT

(NewsUSA) - Pain is the top reason people seek medical care in the U.S. Despite all we now know about pain, many people continue to suffer needlessly. That's because there can be "road blocks" to effective treatment. These can come from a variety of sources - including healthcare professionals and even patients themselves.

While controlling pain hasn't always been a medical priority, the healthcare industry has made great strides in recent years to address this - including the establishment of pain as the "the fifth vital sign." Nevertheless, people seeking treatment may still encounter healthcare professionals who do not take pain seriously, or who do not understand how to provide proper pain management. This can result in inadequate treatment.

"It's important that people with pain find a healthcare professional who understands their needs and is willing to work together to determine what treatment option works best," says Penney Cowan, founder of the American Chronic Pain Association. "With the right care and direction, you can live a full life."

One of the most challenging barriers to adequate pain relief also can come from the people with pain themselves. Some may resist taking pain relievers because of fears of side effects associated with strong prescription medications - it is important to discuss these concerns with a physician. Attitudes toward pain and suffering also may play a role. For instance, some people believe that "good patients" don't complain, or that pain is inevitable.

Individuals should remember that pain should not be brushed aside or ignored. Here are some steps people with pain can follow to overcome barriers to effective pain management:

* Don't suffer in silence: report your pain to your healthcare professional.

* Stay involved in your pain management plan: it may take a few adjustments before you are comfortable with your treatment.

* Educate yourself: you will better understand your pain and what can be done to relieve it.

* Learn how to better communicate with your healthcare professional: this may mean keeping a pain diary to illustrate the details of your pain - where it hurts, pain intensity, and what time of day it is worst.

* Don't settle for inadequate treatment: if your health care provider isn't successfully treating your pain, ask to be referred to a medical professional who can.

CLINE MEMENTOS

Officers of the Montpelier Historical Society recently met with Frederick Cline (pictured above left) of Bedford and accepted items relating to the Cline family to add to the museum collection.

Mr. Cline, a grandson of Orville R. Cline, donated Orville's Farewell Address along with a taped interview of his retirement reception in 1959 after 47 years of service in the Montpelier-Harrison Township Schools. Making mention of M.C. Townsend, L.E. Kelley, H.G. Morgan, M.A. Wilson and Wayne D. Hays, Orville stated, "To have known and to have been permitted to serve with such able educators, with their fine ideals and outstanding characters was indeed a rare privilege." Mentioning some of the intangible results and by-products of education, he went on to stress the importance of Character, Morality, Faith in humanity, a love for and a deep desire to serve your fellow man, and a spiritual faith and poise. Mr. Cline influenced many children and contributed to the lives of many through his chosen field of service.

Numerous pictures and other articles pertaining to Orville, his wife and family were also donated to the museum.

Fred's father, Emory A. Cline, graduated from Montpelier High School in 1934 and at one time was manager of the Palace Theatre on Main Street. Memorabilia of the Palace Theatre and documents regarding Emory's Naval service during World War II will be a welcome addition to the museum.

Don Martin, who is a cousin of Fred's, accompanied him from Bedford to Montpelier to make the presentation.
