Kudos, Kicks & Karats

Well the Huntington Senior Center Chili Cook-off is in the books and we came out with some hardware. The mad scientist came out with a best decorated booth trophy. We like to use the imagination and go all out on the decorations. This year Tara did all the decorating and I swung the chili recipes. Actually we had our decorations last year but since covid we didn't get to use them. We had a good time, even though we claim the other team really stuffed the ballot box in order to win. Lol.

I've been busy trying to find all the parts I need to get my gingerbread house built. This year will be another local building and I'm really kinda excited for this one. Haven't quite figured it out yet, how I'm gonna get it all on the board. There is so many important parts to this one it's gonna be a doozy to get it done. As always I'm not telling which one I'm doing but I'm sure you will look at it and know right away. I don't know why I get so excited on making these, cause my stress level goes sky high, but love being creative I guess.

Tara and I are also putting a tree together for the Festival of Trees. I'm really trying to think about how I'm gonna get this all done, but I always seem to manage to get it done. So wish us luck, we're gonna need it. At least this tree is one I normally put up at the house so it won't be too bad, we just need to add a few more personalized items to it.

Sometimes you get to many irons in the fire, which I do very often, and I always seem to pull through. It keeps me hoppin' and I'm definitely never bored. You know I tried to slow down by omitting a lot of the things I do but there is always something to take its place. I guess I am made to run on full throttle. I'm beginning to wonder if it's really true about the post I seen on facebook one time that said, "when I die and go to heaven I'm not gonna walk through the pearly gates, I'm gonna come in full speed, sliding sideways and saying "wahoo what a ride!!" lol That is definitely me!! I'm my momma's wild child.

The fall air is coming in slowly. I'm just not sure if I'm ready for what follows behind when the fall air is done. I just don't do well with cold and the older I get the worse the fibromyalgia and arthritis is. The meds I take help so much but the cold air just wreaks havoc on me and really slows me down. Maybe it's the good Lord telling me winter is my rest time...lol good luck there, but it does keep me inside. Once I get home from work, you better have a darn good reason for

AREA NEWS

BLAINE BRELSFORD

Occasionally, I see people with cameras, walking up and down Wayne Street, taking pictures of the signs painted on the brick store fronts. The person that painted these signs was an excellent sign painter, self-taught, and did it without stencils. He would take a Myers Department store yard stick and a piece of chalk, lay out and paint most of the signs you can see on the bricks today. The painter was Blaine Brelsford.

Blaine was a shy boy growing up and at the age of 16 he took his first drink. That first drink made him feel so good that he couldn't stop. He became an alcoholic. A lot of times he would be locked up in the town jail, like the lovable Otis on the Andy Griffith show. In later years, he had said he had never married, had no children, and never had a home, a car or any respect because of alcohol.

Several years ago, in the Museum, an older gentleman was telling about Blaine painting the Gold Seal Drug Store sign on the side of the building. He would go up the ladder, paint one letter, and then must go to the Wagon Wheel for a drink. He would come back, paint another letter, and go for another drink. Four or five old timers setting across the street were making bets on which letter he would fall off the ladder, but he never did. Blaine's work still lives on Warren's buildings. One of Warren's personalities we won't forget.

A MISSISSIPPI RIVER BOAT TRIP DAY 5

by Larry Ryan
After another wrapped, breakfast sandwich & orange at the Cambria Inn in Bettendorf, IA, the loaded bus left at 8:09 am. Luggage included! Interstate Highway 80 East was our initial pathway as we headed back towards our home base.

Goodbyes to the Mississippi River occurred at 8:19.

Quickly the bus driver located I-74 on the east side of the river and Galesburg, IL was in the cross hairs.

Our tour guide surprised all the passengers with a famous, Hurt's glazed donut. It was much easier to tackle than the stubborn orange peel at the hotel! At 10:10 am, the bus made a rest stop in Bloomington, IL. Passed a lot near the intersection where several homeless people were sheltered in pop-up tents.

Soon, it began to rain. Again, we were inside. Fortunately, rain missed most of the planned outside activities during this five day adventure. The tour director took our minds off the outside climate and played a DVD of the comedian, Ken Davis. That was enjoyable. Laughter was plentiful.

The bus passed Prairieview Road, I-57, and Rantoul, IL exits. At Danville, IL our 47-passenger vehicle drove past a mysterious billboard that asked the question, "Who Is Jenna Wirth?" I did not Google that one either! My mind was still full of "Field of Dreams" thoughts!

We crossed the Indiana state line at 11:50am. It started to rain again.

Apparently this was consistent with the past weather forecasts. A section was reserved for our bus load in the "Beef House" at the Covington, IN exit. NO waiting in line! The servers in the cafeteria line heaped food onto my plate after I selectively captured a pecan pie slice. Half of the plate of food ended up in a take-home box. Yes, the selections were delicious and enjoyed later too! Clocks were changed.

After losing one hour of time, we officially left the restaurant at 2:40 pm. The bus driver received word about an accident ahead, so the planned route through Crawfordville was rerouted to Indianapolis. Even with a detour around part of I-465 in INDY, we reached the Marion exit at 5:15 pm. and home at 6:00 pm.

It was a pleasurable trip!
Happy Traveling!

SHORT-TERM INVESTMENTS OFFER LIQUIDITY – AND MORE

Generally speaking, investing is a long-term process. You invest in your IRA and 401(k) to reach a long-term goal – retirement. You may invest in a 529 education savings plan for many years to reach another long-term goal – college for your children. But is there also a place in your portfolio for shorter-term investments?

In a word, yes. You have three good reasons for owning short-term investments: liquidity, diversification and protection of longer-term investments. Let's look at all three:

* Liquidity – For many people, the COVID-19 pandemic brought home the need to have ready access to cash, and short-term investment vehicles are typically liquid. Still, some are more liquid than others, and you'll want to know the differences right from the start.

Probably the most liquid vehicle you could have isn't an investment at all, but rather a simple savings or checking account. But you likely could earn much more interest from a high-yield online savings account without sacrificing much, if any, liquidity. Money market accounts are also highly liquid, but they may carry minimum balance requirements.

Other short-term investments may be less liquid, but that may not be a major concern if you don't need the money immediately. For example, you could purchase a type of mutual fund known as an ultra short-term bond fund that invests in longer-term bonds due to mature in less than a year, so you could receive the benefit of the higher interest rates typically provided by these bonds. You could choose to partially or entirely liquidate your bond fund at any time, but it may take several days for the sale to go through, since the shares in the fund need to be sold. You could also invest in a three-month certificate of deposit (CD), but if you cash it out early, you'll lose some of the interest payments.

* Diversification – If your portfolio consists largely of stocks and stock-based ETFs and mutual funds, you could take a hit, at least temporarily, during periods of market downturns, which are a normal part of the investment world. But a diversified portfolio, containing both long- and short-term investments, may hold up better during periods of market volatility. That's because the short-term vehicles we've looked at are typically going to be far less affected by market movements, if they're affected at all. (Keep in mind, though, that diversification by itself can't guarantee profits or protect against all losses.)

* Protection of longer-term investments – If you were to face an unexpected expense, such as the need for a major home or car repair, how would you pay for it?

Without any liquid reserves, you might be forced to dip into your long-term investments, such as your 401(k) and IRA. But by doing so, you could incur taxes and penalties – and, perhaps even more important, you'd be removing resources from accounts designed to help you achieve a comfortable retirement. With enough short-term investments in place, though, you can avoid touching these long-term accounts.

As you can see, you can benefit significantly by adding some short-term investment vehicles to your portfolio. They could make a big difference in your ability to meet your financial goals.

me to get back out, cause your chances of me leaving the house is slim to none. I even have the bus dropping Kylynn off 5 blocks early just so I don't have to get out.

She's not changing buses, she just will get off earlier than normal stop. So that works for me. Its horrible I go to extreme planning just so I don't have to get out.

Everyone have a great week. It looks as if this week will be the last of the 70's weather, of course till Indian Summer, which is after the first frost. I haven't even asked yet what the persimmon seed predicted for winter. As long it's not a knife I'm good.

comfort in your rain gear or tent is to make certain you're weatherproofed and ready for any change in climate. Mend ripped rain gear or a tear in a tent with a strong repair tape, built to adhere in both wet and dry conditions and formulated to withstand extreme temperatures ranging from -70 to 200 degrees Fahrenheit.

2. Fast Fix for Fishing and Hiking Poles. Not all adventures take place on land, so being prepared in all areas of wilderness is key. Fishing poles (and hiking poles for that matter) are built to withstand quick shifts in weight and slight bends, but when they splinter, you need to act fast. Opt for strong waterproof tape with holding power when you need it most, such as T-Rex tapes. They can stick to a variety of surfaces in all weather conditions for a repair you can rely on, even when you're miles away from land. T-Rex Waterproof tape can even save the day if your small boat faces minor damage like a tiny leak or crack.

3. Boot Basics. Sturdy, reliable footwear is essential for any outdoor activity. If the sole separates from the base of the boot or tears, it can be dangerous for your foot to be exposed to the elements. Carrying messy, tacky glue in your pack is inconvenient and a spill hazard, but using duct tape as a wrapping can provide a fast, efficient and less-mess remedy to get you back up and moving in a pinch. A strong barrier wrapped around the top and sole of your boot will offer the protection you need to finish your outing. Additionally, it can help protect from bugs, ticks or poisonous plants when hiking. Wrap the tape around the top of your boots to ensure your pantleg and boot have a seamless safety guard for your trek.

4. Don't Get Stuck in the Mud. There's nothing like splashing around in the mud with an ATV, but sometimes it's hard to tell how deep or tough a puddle will be to get through. Luckily, with the right tools you don't have to stay stuck in the mud. High-performance duct tape, like T-Rex Brute Force, can help you in a wide range of sticky situations. The "World's Strongest Duct Tape," according to the Guinness World Records, is built to hold more than 700 pounds of weight with just one loop of tape. Pull your vehicle, tow your bike or create a lift for your gear with this aggressive, double-thick adhesive cloth tape with a durable, waterproof backing.

Outdoor exploration doesn't have to be stressful. For peace of mind, pack the right gear so you can get to the most important part of your adventure: enjoying yourself!

HOW TO PUT THE POWER OF STEM IN YOUR KIDS' HANDS

(StatePoint) November 8 is National STEM Day and an excellent opportunity to encourage your child to embrace science, technology, engineering and math (STEM) education both inside and outside of the classroom.

Studies show that kids who are exposed to STEM concepts from a young age are more likely to show interest in pursuing STEM careers. With over 50% of the fastest-growing jobs related to STEM, it's no wonder that competency in these areas is a strong indicator of future career success. But STEM education doesn't just help students go directly into STEM careers. Its focus on creative problem-solving, critical thinking, innovation and teamwork helps students develop the skills needed to succeed in any field.

Here are some of the simplest ways to get kids excited about everyday scientific concepts, creativity and STEM:

* Encourage kids to actively participate in STEM-related activities at school and at home. Not sure where to turn? Students and families can check out the range of free content and downloadable lesson plans available at FriXionSTEM.com. Pilot Pen recently partnered with the curriculum experts at STEM.org to develop this curriculum for students in grades K-12 in an effort to make STEM education easy and accessible.

* Expose budding scientists to high-quality learning tools, such as Pilot's line of FriXion erasable pens, markers and highlighters. The first and only "STEM Pen," FriXion is the only writing instrument to be Authenticated by the experts at STEM.org. The unique, thermo-sensitive, erasable ink inside every FriXion pen makes it ideal for everything from taking lab notes and reviewing reference materials to demonstrating scientific principles and covalent bonding. These writing tools allow students of any age to draw, erase, highlight and revise easily and cleanly, so they can take on STEM tasks fearlessly.

* Keep content engaging for your child's age group. Whether accessing lessons online or doing a science kit together, be sure you've selected resources and programming at the right level for your child.

* Seek out cool and exciting STEM opportunities. For example, Pilot's Science FriXion STEM Student Grant rewards exceptional middle and high school scholars who are going above and beyond both inside and outside of their classroom to help enhance the lives of others through their passion for STEM. The grant will award students and their schools a total of $50,000, so that students can enhance their studies and schools can continue to provide high-quality STEM education. To learn more and submit a handwritten nomination, visit FriXionsSTEM.com.

With the right tools and resources, you can bring kids into the world of STEM, and offer them the building blocks for innovation.

AN AFFORDABLE TYPE OF INSURANCE YOU MAY NEED BUT PROBABLY DON'T HAVE

(StatePoint) When you start thinking about how to achieve financial security, a few basic things probably come to mind: insurance for your car and home; disability insurance in case you're injured and can't work; life insurance to protect your family in case something happens to you. But there's one important type of financial protection that many people overlook: umbrella insurance.

"We've found that many people don't understand umbrella insurance, or they mistakenly assume that it's something that's needed only by the very wealthy," said Jon Bloom, vice president, personal auto, Erie Insurance. "The truth is that the vast majority of people with other types of insurance would benefit from this added layer of protection, and it's available for a much lower cost than many people assume."

Umbrella insurance provides coverage above and beyond the limits of other insurance policies, such as auto and homeowners. But industry experts say there are some persistent myths that keep many people from getting it.

Myth #1.

My car insurance policy will cover me for anything bad that happens.

Reality: A tragic car accident that causes life-changing injuries could result in the need for care that costs far more than your car insurance policy's limits, and you could be on the hook to make up the difference.

Myth #2.

My homeowners policy will pay if someone gets hurt on my property.

Reality: Homeowners insurance may pay up to the limits of your policy, but similar to a car accident, if someone suffers a catastrophic accident on your property, the costs could exceed your policy limits. Umbrella insurance also protects against lawsuits for other things unrelated to injuries. For example, if you write a social media post that's construed as damaging to someone's reputation, or if you sit on a nonprofit board or coach a youth sports team and someone brings legal action against you. Ask your insurance agent about the wide range of scenarios that may pertain to you.

Myth #3.

I won't get sued – that only happens to people with a lot of money.

Reality: The truth is that in today's litigious society, anyone can be sued, and if you are responsible for someone's injuries that exceed the limits of your other insurance policies, or if you are sued for other reasons, your house and other financial assets could be at risk.

Myth #4.

Umbrella insurance is expensive.

Reality: You might be surprised to learn how much coverage you can buy for a modest cost. For example, Erie Insurance says most of its customers can buy an extra $1 million in coverage for less than $20 a month.

When it comes to protecting your family's financial future, some things are a given, like car, home and life insurance, but it pays to look beyond the obvious. The best thing to do is talk with your insurance agent to make sure you have the right coverages. Chances are you'll decide that umbrella insurance is a coverage you can't afford not to have.
