Kudos, Kicks & Karats

Boy if I ain't been busy, I've been sick. It all started a few weeks ago when I came down with some sort of crud. I woke up at night with a horrible stomach feeling, like I was gonna get sick. Managed to overcome it, but then the next morning I had the headache of all headaches. I was miserable so I decided to stay home which led to all the testing to make sure I didn't have covid, which I didn't.

We got all our Jeepin trips in. Went to Pigeon Forge and had a great time and then this past weekend went to the 4 Wheel Jamboree Nationals and brought more hardware home, which we received an Award of Excellence. This makes 7 plaques we received with the green Jeep at the national level.

Got me an early Christmas present this year. I have been wanting to switch out the hood with a beefier looking hood, so the price was right so we bought one. Our friend Lonnie will be painting it for us this fall when his job duties slow down. Can't wait to see it on the Jeep. John wants to add some more purple to the jeep like maybe the door hinges but I'm still not to sure I want to do that, but hey you only live once so I guess we will try it.

Well its Bluffton Street Fair week and the weather is showing us it is. We are scheduled to run the opening night of the parade which was Tuesday. So I hope we can get it done between rain showers. So far I think we are gonna get it done. We originally had about 50 to 70 Jeeps coming through the parade but with the weather it could change quick and of course we are last so our numbers may not be to high.

Getting ready to get my fall decorations out. I love the fall colors and I have lots of fall decorations to get out. Gonna change it up a little out side and then probably the normal for inside. I bought a pumpkin spice mum from Walmart. It is really pretty and it does smell kinda like pumpkin spice like it is supposed to. I have it setting in my bird bath so it stays hydrated. I got other mums to put out so I need to get it done tomorrow. I have new decorations for the cemetery too that I need to get out to dad and my grandparents graves so it sounds like I got a lot to get done. I also want to do a trial run on a chili recipe, if all goes as planned we will be representing Heritage Pointe in the Huntington Senior Center Chili Cook Off. It's all a matter if we can get the time

NICKNAME FOR SCHOOL

There is a basketball team who set a scoring record. That team was members of Warren High School, 1911-1912 basketball team. On January 12, 1912, Warren High School whipped Converse 162 to 4. The Warren team was a powerhouse and racked up a record 20 wins and 2 defeats. Included in the list were two over Huntington High School. Warren beat Huntington 77-11 in the first meeting and 58-13 in the second game.

In the game against Converse, the loser picked up their 4 points on free throws all made by one player. High scorer, for the winners, was Clifford R. Wright who had 40 field goals or 80 points. The team captain was Merrit Tam, who after graduating owned the local drug store in town. The other members of the Warren team were Merlin

Bradford, Raymond Huffman, Archie Smith and Dean Freck. Merlin Bradford lived around Warren after graduating and Raymond Huffman lived around Liberty Center.

Charles C. Stech, a teacher at Warren High School, despite his technical limitations, was drafted by the school superintendent to coach the team. Stech said his boys were not necessarily great natural athletes but had tireless enthusiasm. One of the sports writers wrote in the paper the 5 team members moved like lightning and that is how the nickname "Warren Lightning Five" came about.

A MISSISSIPPI RIVER BOAT TRIP DAY 3

by Larry Ryan
Dubuque, IA has a population of 60,000. It was founded in 1783 by Julien Dubuque (1762-1810), a French Canadian trader. He made friends with the Mesquakie Indian Chief, Peosta and laid claim for LEAD mining. After breakfast in the hotel's Tony Roma room, a shuttle took us to a Methodist Church to see its spectacular stained glass windows. The next stop was the Fenelon Place Elevator Company, a two-track, 40 yard, tram ride up to overlook the city. There was no cost to travel up, but $4 dollars to return! Gottcha!

The shuttle dropped us at the National Mississippi River Museum and Aquarium. All was very interesting. A sign stated that 75 % of the earth is covered by water, but only one percent is fresh water! The mighty Mississippi empties 200 million gallons of water into the Gulf of Mexico every minute. Wow!

The Twilight boat return trip to LeClaire departed at 11:15 am. We located rocking chairs forward on the second deck and enjoyed these accommodations until the wind chased us to more comfortable surroundings. A railroad on the Iowa side kept us company for several miles.

After lunch and passing through Lock and Dam # 12, rain chased us inside. Outside seating was slightly damp afterward. More bald eagles were spotted in riverside trees. They have better luck hunting for their river meals right after a rain. Smart birds; they cannot be classified as "bird brains!"

The captain informed us that some of the provisional Mississippi River dams were built under the direction of Lt. Robert E. Lee in 1860. That name rings a bell in history. Our vessel passed a water pumping station which supplies the liquid to an adjacent plot of land that grows rice in the Spring season.

After maneuvering through Lock & Dam # 13 and dropping to a lower downstream level, we passed Clinton, IA at 4:40 pm. and Camanche, IA at 5:15 pm.

Dinner was served onboard in the very cool, A/C dining quarters. We docked at 6:30 pm. and were bussed to the Cambria Hotel in Bettendorf, IA. Tomorrow our group is heading to Dyersville, IA and the "Field of Dreams!"

SKIN CARE TIPS FOR WHEN SUN SEASON IS OVER

(StatePoint) While basic sun protection is likely your top skin care priority in summer, during the fall season, it's time to address other skin care concerns. One matter in particular to pay close attention to is scarring. This is because sun exposure can cause further discoloration in scars. What's more, scar tissue is more susceptible than other skin to sun damage.

Whether you're dealing with surgical scars, scars from scrapes, cuts, or burns, here's what you need to know about caring for these vulnerable areas of skin after a season of summer sun:

* Cover scars: Protect scars from additional sun exposure whenever possible. Keep in mind that you can still be exposed to sun beyond summer and when indoors, so consider dressing accordingly.

* Amplify your protection: As you are apple and pumpkin picking, make sure not to shelve the SPF! Stay consistent with sun protection and be sure your routine also includes vitamin C. Protecting skin from oxidative damage caused by daily exposure to light, heat and pollution, vitamin C is an ingredient vital to healthy skin that amplifies protection and is the ultimate compliment to daily SPF. Check out the portfolio of vitamin C products from SkinCeuticals, which offers something for every skin type. Backed by 16 clinical studies and over 30 years of research, the brand's serums serve as the gold standard for a host of skin care benefits, including correcting the appearance of uneven skin tone and helping to prevent future skin damage.

* Take charge: Doctors recommend having a trusted scar care product readily available in your cabinet.

"You need one with a high-concentration of silicone to deliver soothing protection to all scars, whether they come as a result of a cosmetic procedure or an unintended wound," says Dr. Catherine Chang, SkinCeuticals partner physician with Cassileth Plastic Surgery.

One new option to consider is SkinCeuticals Advanced Scar Control, a long-lasting semi-occlusive treatment designed to protect vulnerable skin and help improve the appearance of new and recent scars. This protective technology is specifically formulated for different types of scars, is appropriate for multiple skin tones, and can complement surgical procedures. In clinical trials, subjects saw a significant improvement in new and recent scar redness, discoloration and texture, with a 29% improvement in overall appearance in just 12 weeks.

Plus, using Advanced Scar Control benefits SkinCeuticals and ReSurge International's charity program, Pioneering Women in Reconstructive Surgery, an initiative that provides surgical training, leadership development and mentorship to women surgeons in high-need areas worldwide so they can complete life-changing surgeries. The initiative has reached 12 countries and over 700 medical professionals. To learn more, visit skinceuticals.com/womensurgeon.

* Get a check-up: Fall is an excellent time of year to check your annual dermatologist appointment off your to-do list. During your visit, your dermatologist will evaluate moles, discoloration and other skin issues. Should your doctor find it necessary to perform a biopsy or mole removal, you'll be well-prepared to care for any resulting scar tissue by following the above tips.

While you may view scars as beyond your control, there's good news -- a scar care routine can reduce the appearance of scars and better protect this vulnerable skin from additional damage.

researchers at the University of California, Davis, those creepy-crawly feelings you may experience upon seeing a bug is simply nature's way of helping you avoid pathogens and parasites.

The good news? Insect experts say that there are steps you can take to protect your home turf from disgusting bugs and other pests.

"While you should not lose your healthy distaste for bugs, you can take steps to keep them out of your home," says Daniel Perry, entomologist at Procter & Gamble.

Here are a few ways to help keep America's top three hated bugs: cockroaches, spiders and ants, along with a host of other common insects, out of your home.

1. Guard doors and windows: Keep doors and windows sealed when they're not in use. If you love a fresh breeze, be sure that your screen doors and windows are in tip top shape and contain no holes. Don't have a screen door? Consider quickly installing a mesh door screen over your front door or patio door that seals up the middle with a magnet. This is a good choice for renters and others unable to make more intensive home updates.

2. Seal holes: Use an afternoon to caulk small cracks in your home's foundation and siding. This is a quick, easy and affordable way to seal these common entry points for bugs.

3. Remove their food source: Bugs need a food source to survive, so keep your home clean. In the kitchen, seal your trash bin and remove its contents regularly, wipe down surfaces -- especially after spills, and sweep up those crumbs. A cockroach can survive months on a single crumb of food! Be sure to regularly vacuum furniture, rugs and carpets in any room where you eat.

4. Blast bugs: Bugs will find their way into your home no matter how hard you try to keep them out. Because a small bug problem can spread quickly, it's important to be ready to meet them head-on. Zevo sprays, including the brand's Multi-Insect Killer Spray, are powered by essential oils. Zevo's BioSelective Technology was developed by experts to be targeted to bugs' unique biology, plus Zevo is safe for use around people and pets when used as directed. To learn more, visit zevoinsect.com.

If you're tired of being grossed out in your own home, it's time to take charge. Not only can you help prevent insects from invading your home, you can swing into action at the first sign of bugs to make sure it doesn't become a bigger problem for you and your family later.

WHAT ALL WOMEN SHOULD KNOW ABOUT BLADDER CANCER

(StatePoint) Karen S. was a long-time oncology nurse when she got her own cancer diagnosis at age 54. What she thought had been recurrent urinary tract infections was revealed to be bladder cancer.

This year, nearly 19,500 women nationwide will be diagnosed with bladder cancer. And while research shows that bladder cancer is more prevalent among men (more than 64,000 U.S. cases are diagnosed annually), women are typically diagnosed with more advanced tumors and have a worse outcome at nearly every stage of the condition. These outcomes could be due to attributing typical warning signs to other medical conditions, such as recurring urinary tract infections or blood in the urine, which is often thought to be associated with menstruation or menopause, and as a result, goes unreported to physicians for longer.

HATE BUGS? HERE'S HOW TO REMOVE THE ICK-FACTOR FROM YOUR HOME

(StatePoint) Hate bugs? You're not alone. Nearly seven in 10 Americans can't sleep if they know there's an insect in the room, according to a recent survey conducted by OnePoll for Zevo. The same poll also found that two in three Americans would give up a month's pay to not deal with bugs!

But for both male and female patients, advancements in technology are significantly improving detection and disease management.

Cystoscopy, the gold standard diagnostic tool for bladder cancer detection, has historically been performed using only white light for visualizing suspicious lesions. Now, more doctors are recommending Blue Light Cystoscopy (BLC), a procedure that uses both white and blue light. But not every facility offers BLC.

"I'm so grateful for the expertise at the bladder cancer center where I was treated and for my doctor choosing to use blue light technology for my diagnostic procedure," says Karen.

An early bladder cancer diagnosis can give you more treatment options. If you have any of the following symptoms, experts advise consulting your doctor:

- * Blood or blood clots in the urine
- * Pain or burning sensation during urination
- * Frequent urination
- * Feeling the need to urinate many times throughout the night
- * Feeling the need to urinate, but not being able to pass urine
- * Lower back pain on one side of the body

For women in particular, sudden changes in urination habits can be signs of bladder cancer. Being vigilant at every age is critical. It was for Mary Beth M. who at first ignored the blood in her urine. When she eventually saw a urologist, she learned she had high-grade, non-muscle invasive bladder cancer with several tumors in her bladder.

"I never expected to be diagnosed with bladder cancer at 28. It's so important to pay attention to the signs and symptoms, no matter how old you are," says Mary Beth, who was also diagnosed using BLC.

Blue Light Cystoscopy is only at select locations. Ask your primary care physician or urologist for more information. You can also learn where BLC is available by visiting <https://rebrand.ly/Find-BLC>.

Early and thorough detection is crucial. No matter your age or gender, be aware of both the symptoms of bladder cancer and the latest technologies available in the detection and management of the disease.

REDUCE YOUR RISK OF FALLING BY TAKING THESE SIMPLE STEPS

(StatePoint) A fall can result in unwanted outcomes, including injury, loss of independence, and a decreased ability to do the things that are most important to you or a loved one.

Each year, 3 million older adults are treated in emergency departments for fall injuries. Even falls that don't lead to injury can provoke a fear of falling that causes you to avoid the activities that keep you healthy, strong, and ultimately less likely to fall. While falls are dangerous, the good news is that experts say they're largely preventable.

"While many factors can contribute to our chances of falling as we get older, falling is not a normal part of aging," says physical therapist and American Physical Therapy Association spokesperson Greg Hartley, PT, DPT. "Working with a physical therapist can empower you or a loved one to regain balance and strength."

The American Physical Therapy Association offers the following tips to help you reduce your risk of falling:

1. Get moving. For older adults, physical activity reduces the risk of falling and fall-related injuries. Stay active to maintain the strength, flexibility, coordination, and balance needed to prevent falls. From swimming to yoga to walking, take part in a variety of physical activities that you enjoy. Talk to your physical therapist to determine which activities are safe for you.

2. Know your risks. A physical therapist can help you assess your risk factors and develop a plan to address them so you can remain independent. Tell your doctor or physical therapist if you have any dizziness, loss of balance, or trouble seeing. Be sure to tell them whether you fell in the last year.

3. Check your medications. Many drugs can cause dizziness, loss of balance, blurry vision, and more. If you have any of these symptoms, review your medications with your pharmacist or doctor.

4. Assess your home's safety. Assess your home to fix or remove anything that could cause trips or slips, such as throw rugs, clutter, poor lighting, and wobbly furniture or handrails. It's also a good idea to install a secure grab bar in the shower and next to the toilet for sturdy support on slippery floors. If you can't make these safety improvements yourself, ask a friend or family member to help. Check with your doctor, physical therapist, or area agency on aging for local programs that offer home safety assessments.

5. Work with a physical therapist. Physical therapy (with exercise) focused on balance, stability, and the ability to perform common tasks is recommended and can prevent falls, according to the U.S. Preventive Services Task Force. Physical therapists are able to help you avoid a fall in the first place, as they are movement experts who can work with you to assess your fall risk factors and develop a plan to address them. They will advise you on making your home safer, educate you about medical risk factors linked to falls, and design a safe balance training program specific to you.

To learn more about the hands-on care, patient education, and prescribed movement that a physical therapist can provide, visit ChoosePT.com, where you can contact a physical therapist directly for an evaluation. To find a physical therapist in your area, visit ChoosePT.com/FindaPT.

With the right resources and support, you can reduce your risk of a fall and maintain your quality of life.
