DEVELOPING A FIRST AID KIT FOR STRESS

from the American Counseling Association

While most of us have first aid supplies for physical injuries, it's also possible, and a good idea, to put together a first aid kit for stress.

One part of our stress first aid kit is short term stress antidotes that use our five senses. With sight, for example, you can use your eyes to focus on things that relax and calm you. Maybe it's simply looking out the window at nature, or looking through some favorite pictures, say from that relaxing vacation last fall.

Sound can also be a good means of reducing stress.

Listening to some favorite, slow, relaxing music or other soothing sounds is always a good stress reducer.

And yes, your nose can also help. The variety of scents available in candles, air fresheners, lotions and aromatherapy oils can all soothe. Scents like lavender and apple tend to calm, while lemon and peppermint help to energize many people.

Taste is another way to find short term relief from stress. There's a reason why comfort foods have earned that name.

And touch? While a soothing massage may be the ultimate stress reducer, simply stroking your pets, taking a relaxing bath or shower, or exchanging hugs with someone close to you are all good ways to use touch for fighting stress.

Other approaches to fighting stress take more effort but produce long-term relief. Things that make your heart feel happy are some of the most effective. That usually means connecting with others and finding acts of kindness that make you feel better.

Tied to that is identifying activities that help you feel good about yourself and your place in the world. It might be volunteering, helping a sick friend, or taking up a craft or some other activity that allows you to be creative.

Some people find that developing a more spiritual side to their lives is a great way to reduce stress. That can mean formal religion, but can also mean spending more time in

SPLASH ON THE WABASH

Splash on the Wabash Rain Barrels ready for auction.....

The annual Splash on the Wabash event Rain Barrel Auction is scheduled for Saturday, July 9, at 12:00 at the Forks of of the Wabash. Ten extremely talented artists have transformed the barrels into spectacular works of art. These artists are donating their time and talent to paint designs on ten rain barrels. Opening bids will start at $50.

All rain barrels have spigots installed on them that attach to hoses. Harvesting rainwater is good stewardship practice for conserving and protecting clean water in our community. A rain barrel is a container that collects and stores the water from roofs and downspouts for future uses such as watering lawns, gardens, and house plants; cleaning off gardening tools; and washing your car. Rain barrels help to lower your water bills, particularly in the summer months by collecting thousands of gallons of free water a year that you don't have to buy!

This year's artists responsible for the artistic designs on the barrels

are: Kids Kampus, Pathfinder Services-Creative Abilities, Boys & Girls Club of Huntington County, Meghan McElhaney, Elyse Schuler, Ann Freds/Joellen Morris, Betty Wallace, Angela Ellsworth, Cassie Crider and Giggabuggy.

Anyone interested in purchasing a rain barrel will have the opportunity to participate in the upcoming silent auction that begins Facebook on Saturday, June 25, at 9:00 am. All bidding will take place on the Splash on the Wabash Rain Barrel Auction page on Facebook. The bidding will officially end on Saturday, July 9, at 4:00 pm.

The link to the Rain Barrel Auction is <https://facebook.com/splashonthewabashrainbarrel>

Those bidders who do not participate in Facebook will have the option to place bids by calling Debbie Dyer @260.341.6207 or 356.8874 or Paula Whiting @ 260.578.6220. They will post your bid on Facebook Rain Barrel Auction Page for the barrel for which you bidding. You will receive a confirmation call or text letting you know that your bid has been accepted or was lower than the current bid. Phone call bidders will need to provide their contact information on voice mail if no one is available if no one is available when you call.

Contact info required is: your full name and your phone or cell number. All bids must be in dollar increments. Winning bidders will be announced in the paper the week following the auction.

A sincere thank you to the sponsors of this year's rain iAB Financial Bank, in conjunction with the American Bankers Association (ABA), is warning consumers of the dangers associated with common financial scams. According to the Federal Trade Commission, between 2012 and 2014, consumers reported more than $42 million in losses from scams involving the impersonation of family members and friends. This scam, commonly known as the "grandparent scam," is a form of financial abuse that deliberately targets older Americans.

IAB BANK TIPS

To commit this crime, fraudsters call claiming to be a family member in serious trouble and in need of money immediately. The scammer might say he's stranded or has been mugged, and call in the middle of the night to add to the urgency and confusion. Once the money is wired, the victim later finds out that it wasn't their grandchild they were helping, iAB Financial Bank, a wholly-owned subsidiary of Independent Alliance Banks, Inc., is one of the largest locally-owned community banks in the area and employs approximately 290 people throughout Allen, Huntington, Marshall and Wells counties.

These helpful tips provided to you in partnership with the American Bankers Association and iAB Financial Bank.

A FRIVOLOUS, MIDDLE-OF-THE-NIGHT DREAM

By Larry Ryan

During a deep sleep one night, while dreams floated aimlessly in my mind, I was approached and invited to play golf with a group of nondescript friends. But then many dreams can be frivolous and nondescript!

Somewhere in the recesses of my hazy, thinking process a nagging thought surfaced. I realized that I had not practiced the game recently which normally meant that the experience would turn out badly! It did, but this happens in real life too without previous practice.

Many times even with a practice session, the results aren't much better. But back to the story.

These friends mentioned the name, coffin. I struggled with this term as it floated across my dreamscape. My transparent subconscious conjured up two possibilities. First, this dream was going to end in a tragedy or secondly I needed to come up with the name of a golf course. Since I had lived in the Indianapolis area for 52 years, the half-awake neurons directed me to focus on the possibility of a course on Cold Springs Road at West 30th Street named Coffin Golf Course. Since time travels miraculously in dreams, suddenly I was there.

I don't recall how many holes we played but as I stepped up to the tee on one hole with a acute dog-leg to the left, someone asked me if I was going to try to draw the ball to the left in the elevated fairway or take the short-cut to the green on the lower level. To draw the ball means to curve the ball to the left for a right-handed golfer. Entering my dreamy mind was a better prospect.

Draw the ball towards the short-cut. So I changed the grip on the club and somehow managed to accomplish that feat. Of course that plan to help me score better on that hole got me into immediate trouble.

Well, there aren't many golf courses that are forgiving when that tiny, dimpled golf ball ends up in a precarious location.

When I finally thought that I had found my ball, another golfer chased me off, claiming that it was his. Golf balls are usually, personally marked for identification.

Actually I had found two balls, his and mine, but his was in a better lie. That is also a golfing term meaning that the ball is lying on the ground in a position more favorable to be struck with the golf club in hopes that it will carry all the way to the green. However, sometimes the ball does not lie on the ground but ends up in a bush, a pond, the creek, a tree, or someone's backyard. Once in a while, roof tops or window glass is involved. So far, luckily, I have not been associated with these latter occurrences. I keep my fingers crossed however.

These numerous, poor locations are obviously called, "Bad Lies!"

Now back to the dream again. My ball was in a bad lie! It was in a rocky area. There are hundreds of rules in golf. Since the sport is considered a gentleman's game, you play on an honor system. This means that you do not move the ball for a better, unhindered swing attempt and you record your score as accurately as possible. I repeat, as accurately as possible!

I chose to follow a rule that allowed me to move the ball out of this rocky, hazardous spot. A golfer is only permitted to move the ball backwards from this spot in relationship to the green.

Not forward! I dropped the ball from shoulder-level, per the rules, but rocks claimed it again. Backed up farther.

Same thing happened. The golfers on the green were waiting impatiently.

Foursomes are the normal number of golfers in one group, but there seemed to be twice that number present. Dreams can be enhanced!

Finally I was ready for turn.

By this time I was getting exasperated with my predicament and tired from dropping the ball, so my swing was worse than normal. Normal is difficult to define by average duffers, a name given to those players who always hope that they could play and score better. When struck, my ball veered off to the right, landed short of the green, next to a door. What? A door in the middle of a golf course? Remember, this is a dream.

There was no rule on how to transcend this predicament. I was on my own to determine a pathway to the green from this location. What seemed, in the dream anyway, as the best alternative was to chip the ball through the open door, through the broken down side of this small shed and onto the green. However, there was a man standing in the doorway. He finally relented and moved to the opposite wall.

The ball was addressed. This is another golf term meaning that the golfer has determined what club to use, has the feet in desired position, has both eyes on the ball, has the mind in gear, and ready to swing the golf club. Now do you understand that there is a lot of fluctuating brain power required for this game? It is even more heightened in a dream!

I struck the ball accurately enough to carry through the doorway and make it to the green, but it hit a railroad track. In the middle of a golf course? Anyway, the ball ricocheted, bounced back towards the man in the shed and ended up at his feet. Again he was requested to move out of the way.

Don't remember how I managed to finish or what score was forthcoming on that hole. My playing partners had moved on and were headed off for lunch. Nobody offered to buy me lunch. Maybe they were too fatigued in body and mind from their long wait on that last green to accommodate me. I feel that there should be a golf rule that states that the last one to finish is treated to complimentary food service. Looked that up. To my disappointment, there is no such rule. I excused my nondescript friends.

Anyway, after that my dream jumped around a lot. I found my car. Decided to drive back to the golf course and order a hot dog, the typical nourishment for most golfers along with a liquid refreshment. Many times a certain liquid helps to obscure the significance of an ugly golf score. Had to turn the car around when faced with a one-way street going in the opposite way that I wanted to travel. Ditched the automobile. Walked through a construction site. Ended up on the eighth floor of a high-rise, open-walled, unfinished downtown building!

When I awakened, I was tired from the energy expended in the dream activity and relieved that the frivolous dream had finally ended!
